Internet Censorship

Many countries these days are having to adjust to the widespread use of the internet and especially social media and social networking sites. New laws and rules need to be made. There is a delicate balance between controlling the internet and protecting people from internet crime.

Some people think that the internet should be completely free from censorship and control by governments. Big music and movie companies would like to shut down websites that share their products for free. In many cases social networking sites are used to organize protests against governments and many people criticize their governments and politicians by writing blogs.

Children need to be protected from harmful content on the internet. This should be the responsibility of parents and teachers who can restrict access to certain websites. Some countries heavily censor their internet access while others allow almost free access to any information. The internet will continue to evolve and grow. One thing is sure, it will affect us in many ways in the future.
